

Salon and Wellness Campaign Brief

NAME _____ DATE _____ PERIOD _____

1. Define the business

Create a fictional salon, barbershop, nail studio, skincare studio, mobile service, or SFX studio.

Business name: _____

Service offered: _____

Fictional target customer: _____

Location type, not a real address: _____

One thing that makes the business different:

One business skill the owner needs and why:

2. Sketch the customer experience

Label the service area, check-in or scheduling point, sanitation or cleanup area, one accessibility choice, and one place where the owner manages supplies or records.

3. Create one polished wellness post

Use one technique from the workbook's Stress Toolkit. This is a fictional classroom design. Do not publish it or use a real account, handle, location, person, or contact detail. Do not promise that one technique treats or cures a health condition.

Technique: _____

Headline: _____

Plain-language explanation - 1 or 2 sentences:

One realistic tip or encouragement:

Design the post. Include the headline, short explanation, tip, and one visual element.

4. Plan two more posts without building them

POST	DIFFERENT TECHNIQUE	HEADLINE	ONE-SENTENCE TIP

3

5. Run the reader and safety check

- ☐ The post teaches one specific tool.
- ☐ The language is supportive, not medical advice.
- ☐ It does not promise a cure or guaranteed result.
- ☐ It contains no real personal or contact information.
- ☐ A middle-school reader can tell what to try.

Feedback route: [] partner [] teacher [] private self-check

One strength:

One change that would make the message clearer or safer:

Revision I made:

6. Connect the campaign to entrepreneurship

How could a useful, accurate post build trust without replacing professional help?
